The Civil War affected every ward of the District of Columbia, including that part of the ward that became known as Foggy Bottom. Thousands of men volunteered to fight to preserve the Union. Almost every family was affected, not the least the family of William T. Carroll, Clerk of the Supreme Court, his wife Sally Sprigg Carroll, and their two sons and four daughters, who lived on F Street at the corner of 18th in Foggy Bottom and near the Executive Mansion. Much of their street was requisitioned by the military. At one end, the Winder Building served as a nerve center of the war; at the other end, Camp Fry was constructed on either side of 23rd from Washington Circle down to the waterfront. Speakers at this evening's event will focus on the camp, the Street, the Winder Building, and the Carroll family as each played its part in the war effort.

Event includes program and dinner. In-person: DACOR/Civil War Round Table member $55; non-member $65. Virtual: $10. For further information, visit the DACOR Event Calendar: <https://tinyurl.com/mpw23ye9>
